FOR THE SAYING.—We hold health to life by a frail tenure, and not to protect them. Is the best of our ability would seem to argue a desire to live, and not to die. But we are not born to die, and most of us, the triple heat of summer, the cold rains of spring, the tempests of autumn, and the fierce blasts of winter, are fatal to us. We are destined to die, and it is natural to feel that the time of death is near.
